STATE OF THE UNION ADDRESS

Obama claims economy progressing

■ President seeks continued improvement in next four years

By Julie Pace
AP White House Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Uncompromising and politically emboldened, President Barack Obama urged a deeply divided Congress Tuesday night to embrace his plans to use government money to create jobs and strengthen the nation's middle class. He declared Republican ideas for reducing the deficit "even worse" than the unpalatable deals Washington had to stomach during his first term.

In his first State of the Union address since winning re-election, Obama conceded economic revival is an "unfinished task," but he claimed clear progress and said he was seeking to build on it as he embarks on four more years in office.

"We have cleared away the rubble of crisis, and we can say with renewed confidence that the state of our union is strong," Obama said, speaking before a joint session of Congress and a television audience of millions.

In specific proposals for his second term, an assertive Obama called for increased federal spending to fix the nation's roads and bridges, the first increase in the minimum wage in six years and expansion of early education to every American 4-year-old. Seeking to appeal for support from Republicans, he promised that none of his proposals would increase the deficit "by a single dime."

In the Republican response to Obama's address, rising GOP star Marco Rubio of Florida came right back at the president, saying his solution "to virtually every problem we face is for Brenda Williams is a calm, serene presence.

Her demeanor suits her often hectic job. She's worked as a bus driver for Henderson County Schools for 29 years.

For the last six years or so, Williams has transported special-needs students in the morning and afternoon from Chandler Elementary and North Middle School. Her workload also includes a mid-day-shift preschool route.

The special-needs community presents an additional challenge that takes an extra level of compassion from bus drivers, said Keegan O'Daniel, the district's director of transportation. Williams exemplifies that type of person, he said.

"The attention she pours onto those kids is pretty unique and special," said O'Daniel. "She really encompasses and exemplifies what it means to be a bus driver."

Dorner manhunt possibly finished

■ Ex-cop didn't exit fiery cabin

Gillian Flaccus
Associated Press

BIG BEAR, Calif. — The man believed to be fugitive ex-cop Christopher Dorner never came out of a California mountain cabin, and a single shot was heard inside before the cabin was engulfed in flames, a law enforcement official told The Associated Press.

Christopher Dorner

The law enforcement official requested anonymity because of the ongoing investigation.

A fourth person — a deputy — died earlier in the latest confrontation with America's most-wanted man, which seemed to be coming to an end.

Officials were waiting for the fire to burn out before approaching the ruins to search for a body.

"We have reason to believe that it is him," San Bernardino County sheriff's spokeswoman Cynthia Bachman said.

The cabin was on fire and smoke was coming from the structure in the late afternoon after police surrounded it in the snow-covered woods of Big Bear, a resort town about 80 miles east of Los Angeles.

Bachman didn't say how the fire started but noted

It's official: City's concealed carry gun ban voted down

By Frank Boyett
fboyett@thegleaner.com
270-831-8342

Despite earlier promises that it would not vote on a concealed carry gun ban without first letting the public know, the Henderson City Commission brought the matter back up Tuesday — but only so it could put a knife in the issue's heart.

At the Jan. 22 meeting the commission unanimously passed first reading of an ordinance that would prohibit the carrying of concealed deadly weapons into city-controlled buildings. A companion measure would have changed the employee manual to impose the same ban on city employees.

Both measures had been scheduled for final reading at a Jan. 24 special meeting, but were removed from the agenda after an outcry arose. A large crowd was poised to attend the Jan. 24 meeting, but dispersed when it learned that the issue would not be on the agenda.

Commissioner Tom Davis said he promised members of the crowd the matter would not be brought up again without proper public notice beforehand.

The ban affecting city employees was unanimously rejected on final reading Tuesday, and a new ordinance that deleted the offending language was adopted on first reading. That prompted Commissioner Robert Pruitt to make a motion to bring up for final reading the ordinance that would affect the general public.

Bill would restore some felons' voting rights

Bruce Schreiner
Associated Press

LOUISVILLE — Nearly a quarter-million people in Kentucky are denied voting rights due to prior felony convictions, ranking among the highest disenfranchisement rates in the country, a new report said Tuesday.

Voting booths are off-limits to one of every 14 adults in Kentucky, nearly three times the national rate, according to the report released by the League of Women Voters of Kentucky.

Among blacks, almost one in five is disenfranchised in Kentucky — almost triple the national rate, it said. The findings come as Kentucky lawmakers again consider legislation that would restore some felons' voting rights. Such proposals have been stymied for years in the General Assembly.

"If you believe in redemption ... then people who have rehabilitated themselves ought to be able to be just like any other citizen and be allowed to vote," said state Rep. Jesse Crenshaw, who has championed the cause for years.

With an estimated 243,842 of its adults barred from voting, Kentucky has the nation's third-highest disenfranchisement rate, behind Florida and Mississippi, the report said.

Kentucky has the second-highest rate among blacks, it said.

"Overall, 90 percent of the disenfranchised population is not in prison, but living in the community," the report said.

Nearly three-fourths of those Kentuckians have completed their sentences, it said. Kentucky is one of four states that permanently disenfranchise all felons, even after their sentences are completed, it said.

A proposed constitutional amendment that cleared a House committee on Tuesday would make most felons automatically eligible to vote after serving their sentences or completing probation or parole. Those convicted of intentional killing or

Christians could rejoin Medi-Share under proposal

■ Firm forced out of state last year due to insurance compliance issues

By Roger Alford
Associated Press

FRANKFORT — A Christians-only health care ministry that was forced out of Kentucky last year could be invited back under legislation that cleared its first legislative hurdle Tuesday.

The Senate Banking and Insurance Committee voted 11-0 to pass a bill that would exempt Medi-Share, a Florida-based cost-sharing ministry, from state insurance regulations.

Franklin County Circuit Judge Thomas Wingate ordered Medi-Share to stop operating in Kentucky last year at the request of the Department of Insurance because it didn't comply with insurance regulations.

Sen. Tom Buford, R-Nicholasville, said the legislation that now goes to the full Senate for consideration would allow about 800 Kentuckians to rejoin Medi-Share. The plan resembles secular insurance in some ways but only allows participation by people who pledge to live Christian lives with no smoking, drinking, using drugs or engaging in sex outside of marriage.

Medi-Share contends that its participants aren't buying insurance but are involved in a charitable endeavor to help cover medical bills of fellow Christians and potentially have their own expenses covered should the need arise.

Some of the former participants — including the Rev. Dewayne Walker, pastor of Mount Olivet Baptist Church in Lexington — told lawmakers they want to be a part of Medi-Share. Walker said Medi-Share paid about $250,000 in medical bills for his wife, who had cancer.

"We are more than pleased with the coverage we've gotten so far," Walker said.

Buford, chairman of the Senate Banking and Insurance Committee and sponsor of the bill, said he proposed an easy fix that takes Medi-Share and two other such ministries operating in Kentucky out from under the oversight of the Department of Insurance.

Buford said his rationale was simple: "The Department of Insurance regulates insurance companies. This is not an insurance company."

Panel passes high school drop-out bill

By Ben Finley
Associated Press

FRANKFORT — Kentucky teenagers would no longer be able to drop out of high school at 16 under a bill that passed a House committee on Tuesday.

State Rep. Jeff Greer, D-Brandenburg, said the measure would save money, offsetting the costs of keeping possible drop-outs in school. He said more Kentuckians with high school diplomas will lessen the number of people on public assistance and in prison.

"It's kind of hard for me to look at this as 'What's it going to cost us?' I think it's 'What's it going to save us? What's it

For the past decade, the Department of Insurance has been in the unenviable position of having to fight against a Christian cost-sharing ministry in a Bible-belt state. The agency took the case to court because of concerns that some Christians might mistakenly believe they're paying into an insurance plan that guarantees coverage if they're hospitalized. Medi-Share offers no such guarantee.

The legal battle between Medi-Share and Kentucky revolved around how tightly the state can regulate the Christian health care ministry that serves nearly 40,000 people in 48 states.

HCC dedicates conference room to Marshall Arnold

By Erin Schmitt

With a tug of black cloth, a portrait of Marshall Arnold was unveiled in a conference room that now bears his name at Henderson Community College.

What was formerly known as room 208 of HCC's administration building was dedicated as the Dr. Marshall Arnold Conference Room during a ceremony Monday afternoon.

Arnold, who died in 2006 at age 85, was the college's president from 1964-1986. For many years, he was synonymous with HCC.

"When you thought of the Henderson Community College, you thought of Dr. Arnold," said Cass Wilson, chair of the HCC board of directors.

During Arnold's tenure, HCC grew from one building to four permanent structures and three temporary ones.

Scholarships, enrollment and fields of study offered increased and it under Arnold's administration that off-campus classes were first offered in Union and Daviess counties.

One of his greatest achievements was hiring quality faculty, some of whom still work at the college today, said former HCC President Patrick Lake.

"Dr. Arnold was a hard-working, dedicated and loyal professional," he said. "I will forever be in his debt for making my job at HCC smooth."

Several of Arnold's friends and family attended the dedication, including his widow, Dorris Arnold, children Mac Arnold and Martha Ward, and several grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

"He would be extremely touched by this," Ward said. "Daddy devoted 20 years of his life to this place and it meant a lot to him, so this is a real honor for him and the family."

At the conclusion of the ceremony, HCC President Kris Williams said good work would continue to be done in the Arnold Conference Room, "just like he would have done."

Papal hints on retirement went ignored

Pope Benedict XVI's decision to retire Feb. 28, a well-kept secret announced Monday by the pontiff himself, took both the Roman Catholic Church and the wider world generally by surprise. But maybe it shouldn't have.

In 2010, Benedict said that if a pope felt no longer physically, spiritually and psychologically capable of handling the demanding duties of the office, then he had a right, even an obligation, to resign.

Pope Benedict XVI

But apparently few of the faithful took this to heart. After all, no pope had resigned since 1415, more than 70 years before Columbus first sighted the Americas. The papal deathwatch had become something of a tradition as aging pontiffs clung to life and office.

One wonders how much Benedict, 85, was influenced by his mentor and predecessor, John Paul II, who died a lingering death from Parkinson's disease in 2005 but struggled, often in heartbreaking fashion, to carry on until the end. One had to admire John Paul's strength of will, but still feel the pathos of the once-vigorous priest, who had weathered war and communism, shrunken within his robes and supported by attendants.

Benedict had contemplated a life in academe, as a theologian, but the church kept calling on his obvious organizational talents. He was bishop of Munich for only three months before being made a cardinal in 1977. Four years later, John Paul named him leader of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, the office that protects and preserves Catholic orthodoxy. Benedict was a tireless and sometimes blunt-spoken defender of traditional tenets. He fought off the ordination of women, and he was criticized as slow to react to the church's sexual-abuse scandal.

The timing of Benedict's decision indicates it was not arrived at casually. Lent begins this Wednesday, giving the College of Cardinals time to convene and elect a new pope by Easter, on March 31.

Benedict had barely announced his decision when he was criticized for not continuing the tradition of dying in office. But Benedict did what he thought was best for the church, "after having examined my conscience before God."

Preliminary plans call for him to leave the Vatican upon his successor's election, and then go to the papal retreat at Castel Gandolfo, just southeast of Rome. From there, he can enter a cloistered monastery where, in privacy and peace, he can take up the academic life he had planned when he entered the priesthood 61 years ago.

Don't feel bad if you're a little ashen

Good morning, it's Ash Wednesday.

Fat Tuesday is behind us, and Bourbon Street in New Orleans is probably still piled high with the remnants of the Mardi Gras bacchanalia.

I think I'd rather witness the courir de Mardi Gras, the country tradition in south Louisiana in which revelers dress in costumes and masks made of painted window screen, and, under the supervision of their capitaines on horseback, travel from farmhouse to farmhouse, crying "cinq-sous pour les Mardi Gras" — "a nickel for the Mardi Gras" — and begging for ingredients for the Mardi Gras gumbo. A highlight is when a farmer tosses a chicken in the air, to be chased down across a muddy field by the well-lubricated celebrants.

More restrained observers of the season may have observed Shrove Tuesday by eating tall stacks of buttery pancakes.

Either way, today is Ash Wednesday, the day when millions of Catholics as well as other Christians will attend a Mass or church service.

Such services typically include the imposition of ashes — the placement of a smudgy cross on the foreheads of worshippers as an acknowledgment of humility, a recognition of mortality and a sign of penance.

"We don't wear the ashes to proclaim our holiness," writes Father Lawrence E. Mick, a priest of the Catholic Archdiocese of Cincinnati, "but to acknowledge that we are a community of sinners in need of repentance and renewal."

Ash Wednesday isn't Scriptural, per se. But it is ancient; Catholic historians date the tradition back to 960. By the 12th century, the use of the ashes of palm fronds from the previous year's Palm Sunday observance came into practice.

Further, the Scriptures are packed with accounts of the use of ashes by those who were in mourning or in confession. The Book of Numbers, for instance, instructed the Israelites to use the ashes of a burned heifer for purification of sin.

Biblical mourners and those showing submission would tear (or "rend") their clothes, put on sackcloth and pour ashes over their heads; those in particular anguish, like Job, would sit in ashes. Daniel sought the Lord with fasting and sackcloth and ashes. David's daughter Tamar put ashes on her head because she had been shamed. In the King James translation of Jeremiah, the people of Israel were admonished to "gird thee with sackcloth, and wallow thyself in ashes."

A smudge today notwithstanding, Christians these days are not much inclined to wallow in ashes.

We're not much for donning sackcloth, either. I think people of our age think of sackcloth as being like a burlap bag. But the 1906 Jewish Encyclopedia says that while it was indeed coarse and perhaps bag-shaped, sackcloth was in fact usually made of goat's hair.

Meanwhile, this is also the first day of Lent, which for those Christians who observe it is the period of 40 days (not counting Sundays) leading up to Easter. It is intended to be a period of repentance, reflection and fasting.

Jesus himself fasted in the Judean wilderness for 40 days and nights. American Christians aren't nearly so keen to fast; we do well to avoid food just long enough to get our cholesterol tested. We embrace fasting about as eagerly as we embrace speaking in tongues (even if that was a spiritual gift heartily endorsed by no less than the Apostle Paul).

But there was much fasting in the Scriptures. Israelites fasted for a week after their first king, Saul, died. King David fasted and wept for a week while pleading for the life of his first baby son with Bathsheba. Nehemiah fasted for days while mourning over the news that Jerusalem's wall had been destroyed. Psalmists fasted; so did Daniel and Paul and the disciples of John the Baptist.

So keen were the Israelites on fasting that Jesus, in the Sermon on the Mount, saw the need to instruct the people on the need for sincerity and humility:

"When you fast, do not look somber as the hypocrites do, for they disfigure their faces to show others they are fasting. Truly I tell you, they have received their reward in full. But when you fast, put oil on your head and wash your face, so that it will not be obvious to others that you are fasting, but only to your Father, who is unseen; and your Father, who sees what is done in secret, will reward you."

Jesus often preached against hypocrites and hypocrisy and, well, show-offs. In that same sermon, he said:

"Be careful not to practice your righteousness in front of others to be seen by them. If you do, you will have no reward from your Father in heaven."

"So when you give to the needy, do not announce it with trumpets, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues and in the streets, to be honored by others. Truly I tell you, they have received their reward in full. But when you give to the needy, do not let your left hand know what your right hand is doing, so that your giving may be in secret. Then your Father, who sees what is done in secret, will reward you."

"And when you pray, do not be like the hypocrites, for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and on the street corners to be seen by others. Truly I tell you, they have received their reward in full. But when you pray, go into your room, close the door and pray to your Father, who is unseen. Then your Father, who sees what is done in secret, will reward you."

We suffer no shortage of hypocrites today. But we're at little risk of seeing an overabundance of sackcloth or, after today, ashes.

We won't witness much fasting, either, although I know Catholic and some Protestant friends who will give up something for Lent: chocolate, say, or beer or texting or Facebook. I've even heard of people who give up gossip for Lent.

Others Christians will participate in the Henderson County Ministerial Association's Wednesday Lenten services, beginning at noon next Wednesday at First Christian Church and then rotating to other churches up through Maundy Thursday and Good Friday. It's an opportunity for ecumenical fellowship and worship — and tasty light lunches and tempting desserts in the fellowship halls afterward.

And no ashes are required.

Help for mentally ill vital in preventing shootings

From The Daily Herald, Arlington Heights, Ill.:

Following the school shootings in December, the nation's gun laws seemed the obvious place to look to prevent future attacks in schools, malls, theaters and workplaces. But another key theme that emerged — and deserves a great deal of attention as well — is the question of how to help the mentally ill....

What should be done? While lawmakers weigh funding issues, an important piece of any solution must be education and awareness at all levels. Until the public has a better understanding of the signs and best treatment of mental illness — and erases the stigma attached to it — progress will lag.

As for prevention of future tragedies or mass shootings, we can do a better job of learning the signs in someone at risk of committing an act of violence. If we turn our backs, we all will suffer. The loss of 28 lives in Connecticut has rekindled the debate about mental illness. We must not let the conversation stop.

Officials working to find motive

■ Texan shot at officers in courthouse

By Randall Chase
Associated Press

WILMINGTON, Del. — A bitter custody battle that included an international kidnapping and prison sentences for a former optometrist and his mother ended in gunfire at a Delaware courthouse, with the doctor's father killing his former daughter-in-law and another woman before fatally shooting himself.

Delaware State Police said 68-year-old Thomas Matusiewicz walked into the lobby of the New Castle County Courthouse on Monday, pulled out a .45-caliber semi-automatic pistol and shot 39-year-old Christine Belford and her 47-year-old friend Laura Mulford. He then exchanged fire with police, hitting two officers who were protected by armored vests.

Authorities were working Tuesday to understand how the killings were planned, questioning former optometrist and convicted kidnaper David Matusiewicz about his father and searching the older man's home in Edcouch, Texas.

Belford and Mulford were at the county courthouse on Monday to attend a child support arrears hearing for David Matusiewicz.

During the shootout, Thomas Matusiewicz suffered two gunshot wounds but died from a self-inflicted gunshot, said Delaware State Police spokesman Sgt. Paul Shavack.

Senate panel advances Hagel despite deep split

■ Bid to head Pentagon goes to full Senate

By Donna Cassata
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A bitterly divided Senate panel Tuesday voted to approve President Barack Obama's nomination of Chuck Hagel to be the nation's defense secretary at a time of turmoil for the military with looming budget cuts, a fresh sign of North Korea's nuclear ambitions and drawdown of U.S. forces in Afghanistan.

The Armed Services Committee voted 14-11 to send the nomination to the full Senate, with all the panel's Democrats backing the president's choice to succeed Defense Secretary Leon Panetta. The committee's Republicans were unified in their opposition to their onetime colleague, a former two-term Republican senator from Nebraska and twice-wounded Vietnam combat veteran.

Hagel would take charge of a military facing spending cuts on global challenges.

Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., said he would move ahead with a full Senate vote despite Republican complaints that he was "jamming it through." A vote is expected Thursday, and barring any surprises, the Senate is likely to confirm him.

Hagel, 66, would take charge of a military facing deep cuts in projected spending; challenges from North Korea, Iran and Syria; and the reduction of U.S. combat forces in Afghanistan.

Democrats, who hold a 55-45 edge in the Senate, have the numbers to confirm Hagel on a majority vote, but would need the support of five Republicans before an up-or-down vote on the president's choice would be allowed.

More than a dozen Republicans oppose the nomination, and the committee's ranking Republican, Sen. Jim Inhofe of Oklahoma, is insisting that any confirmation be based on 60 votes rather than a majority of the Senate. But several Republicans reject what would be an unprecedented effort to delay a vote on a Cabinet nominee for defense secretary.

Hagel faces fierce opposition from Republicans who have challenged his past statements and votes on Israel, Iran, Iraq and nuclear weapons.

All 55 Democrats are expected to back Hagel, and two Republicans — Sens. Thad Cochran, of Mississippi, and Mike Johanns, of Nebraska — have said they will vote for the nominee. At least five Republicans have said they oppose a filibuster.

Senate gun talks make little headway

WASHINGTON — The toll of gun violence and the widespread disgust it has generated makes it time for new federal gun curbs that balance public safety with gun rights, Democrats said Tuesday at the Senate's latest hearing on restricting firearms.

Republicans said today's unenforced gun laws give criminals no reason to fear ignoring those laws. And they warned that the Constitution's right to bear arms must be protected, even after unspeakable events such as the December slaughter of 20 first-graders in Connecticut.

Each side trotted out its own legal experts, statistics and even relatives of people slain by gun-wielding assailants. In the end there was little partisan agreement, though Sen. Ted Cruz, R-Texas, said cooperation was possible on stopping straw purchases, in which someone legally buys a gun for a criminal or a person barred from owning one.

The crowded hearing room was filled with people from gun control groups and according to Sen. Richard Blumenthal, D-Conn., included relatives of some killed in the Newtown, Conn., elementary school shootings. Sen. Richard Durbin, D-Ill., chairman of the Senate Judiciary subcommittee holding the hearing, asked friends and families of gun victims to stand, and dozens rose.

"We know that we have to act," Durbin said.

Senate expands women's abuse act

WASHINGTON — In a solid show of bipartisanship, the Senate has voted to renew the two-decade-old Violence Against Women

Act with new provisions to ensure that gays and lesbians, immigrants and Native-American women have equal access to the act's anti-domestic violence programs.

The act is credited with aiding millions of domestic violence victims and reducing domestic abuse in the U.S. It expired in 2011 and Congress has struggled to replace it.

ILLINOIS

Pendleton shooters held without bail

CHICAGO — Two men charged in the death of a 15-year-old Chicago honor student were ordered held without bail Tuesday at a hearing where prosecutors contended the shooting happened while they were hunting for members of a rival gang.

Hadiya Pendleton died after being shot in a park about a mile from the Chicago home of President Barack Obama on Jan. 29, just days after she performed during Obama's inauguration festivities in Washington.

Cook County Judge Israel Desierto ordered Michael Ward, 18, and Kenneth Williams, 20, held without bail after prosecutors told the judge in chilling detail what happened the day Pendleton died.

Prosecutors said Ward and Williams were in a vehicle circling the park when they spotted Pendleton's group and thought they were rival gang members. Williams handed Ward a gun, and Ward snuck up on the group and opened fire, prosecutors said.

"She was able to make it outside of the park and then collapsed on the street," Assistant Cook County state's attorney Jennifer Sexton said. Pendleton died later that day.

Rebels take small base; deaths at 70K

Rebels captured a small military base near Aleppo on Tuesday and stormed another in the same area that protects a major airport, a day after seizing Syria's largest dam.

With the back-to-back blows to President Bashar Assad's regime, opposition fighters appear to be regaining some momentum, expanding their northern zone of control while at the same time pushing deeper into the heart of the capital, Damascus.

Rebels have been attacking Aleppo's civilian airport, which remains in regime hands, for weeks. They now appear to have removed the main defenses around the facility. Civilian flights stopped weeks ago because of the intensity of the fighting.

In New York, U.N. human rights chief Navi Pillay said the number of people killed in Syria is probably now approaching 70,000. Her comments came less than six weeks after she said the death toll had exceeded 60,000.

She told the U.N. Security Council its deep division and inaction over the nearly 2-year-old conflict had been "disastrous" and civilians on all sides had paid the price.

Middle East loses freshwater reserves

DOHA — A NASA study found that an amount of freshwater almost the size of the Dead Sea has been lost in parts of the Middle East due to poor management, increased demands for groundwater and the effects of a 2007 drought.

The study, to be published Friday in Water Resources Research, a journal of the American Geophysical Union, examined data over seven years from 2003 from a pair of gravity-measuring satellites. Researchers found freshwater reserves in parts of Turkey, Syria, Iraq and Iran along the Tigris and Euphrates river basins had lost 117 million acre-feet of its total stored freshwater.

About 60 percent of the loss resulted from pumping underground reservoirs for ground water and another fifth due to impacts of the drought including declining snow packs.

ITALY

Spy heads convicted in terror kidnapping

MILAN — A Milan appeals court on Tuesday convicted two former Italian spy chiefs for their role in the kidnapping of a terror suspect as part of the CIA's extraordinary rendition program.

The court overturned the acquittals of a lower court and sentenced Nicolo Polari, the former head of Italian military intelligence, to 10 years, and Marco Mancini, a former deputy and head of counterintelligence, to nine. Three other Italian agents also were convicted and handed six-year sentences.

Earlier this month, another Italian appeals court vacated the acquittals and convicted in absentia three Americans, including the former Rome CIA station chief, in the same case. They had been acquitted due to diplomatic immunity.

In all, 26 Americans, most CIA agents, have been convicted in absentia in the 2003 kidnapping of Egyptian Osama Moustafa Hassan Nasr, also known as Abu Omar, with sentences ranging from six to nine years. It is unlikely any will serve time.

Ghanaian Cardinal Peter Turkson says the time is right for a pontiff from the developing world, and that he's available for the job "if it's the will of God."

Campaigning for pope already hits high gear

■ Benedict's retirement sets ritual in motion

By Nicole Winfield
Associated Press

VATICAN CITY — It's a political campaign like no other, with no declared candidates or front-runners and a taboo against openly gunning for the job. But the maneuvering to select the next pope is under way a day after Pope Benedict XVI stunned the world and announced he would retire Feb. 28.

One African contender said Tuesday it was time for a Third World pope — and said he was free if God wanted him.

Berlin's archbishop urged mercy for the victor, given the terrible weight of the office, while Mexico City Cardinal Norberto Rivera asked for prayers so that the best man might win.

It's all part of the ritual of picking a pope, the mysterious process that takes place behind closed doors at the Sistine Chapel, where the "princes" of the church, the 117 or so cardinals under age 80, vote in next month's conclave.

Once sequestered, they cast secret ballots until they reach a two-thirds majority and elect a new leader of the world's 1.2 billion Catholics.

In the run-up to the conclave, cardinals engage in a delicate dance, speaking in general terms about the qualities of a future pope and the issues facing the church. It's rare for anyone to name names, much less tout himself as a candidate.

If asked, most cardinals routinely invoke the refrain: "He who goes into a conclave a pope comes out a cardinal."

Such genteel public platitudes, however, belie the very real factions within the College of Cardinals that determine the vote.

Just because the cardinals all wear the same red cassock and recite the same prayers doesn't mean they all think alike. They have different visions of what the church needs, different views on critical issues and different allegiances: geographical, sentimental and theological.

This time around, it seems geography is very much front and center, at least in the public debate Tuesday, the first day of the conclave campaign.

One of Africa's brightest hopes to be the next pope, Ghanaian Cardinal Peter Turkson, said the time was right for a pontiff from the developing world, and that he's available for the job "if it's the will of God."

But Berlin's archbishop, Cardinal Rainer Maria Woelki, said he doesn't care "whether he is African or Asian or Latin American or European."

More importantly, Woelki said, "We should treat mercifully the person who has to take over such an office, in order not to expect of him ... possibly 20, 25 or even more years."

Pope's life on way to dramatic changes

By Victor L. Simpson and Nicole Winfield
Associated Press

VATICAN CITY — The papal ring will be destroyed, along with other powerful emblems of authority, just as they are after a pope's death.

The retiring Pope Benedict XVI will live in a monastery on the edge of the Vatican gardens and will likely even give up his beloved theological writing.

The Vatican went out of its way Tuesday to declare that for Benedict, retirement means just that: retirement.

With speculation swirling about his future role, the Vatican's chief spokesman explicitly stated that Benedict will not influence the election of his successor.

And the Rev. Federico Lombardi deepened the sense of finality by saying that after his Feb. 28 abdication, "objects strictly connected" with the papal ministry will be "terminated." Among these is the papal ring, used as a seal for documents, which is smashed upon a pope's death.

And while the first papal resignation in 600 years has left behind a vast uncharted territory to navigate — how does one address or even dress a retired pope? — the church sought to send a clear message that Benedict will not be pulling strings from behind the scenes.

"The pope will surely say absolutely nothing about the process of the election," Lombardi told reporters at a briefing.

LaPierre: ‘Absent-minded’ firearm firebrand

By Nancy Benac
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Wayne LaPierre would just as soon read a book as fire a gun. That’s right, the National Rifle Association’s fire-breathing defender of gun rights is more academic than marksman. “A policy wonk,” says Joseph Tartaro, president of the pro-gun Second Amendment Foundation. “He is more professorial than you would think.” “Wayne is a Washington-type person,” says John Aquilino, a former NRA spokesman who worked with LaPierre. “He is best characterized as an absent-minded professor.” A professor, that is, with a million-dollar megaphone and a well-honed ability to dish apocalyptic warnings about a tyrannical government angling to grab people’s firearms. “It’s about banning your guns ... PERIOD!” LaPierre wrote in a January email to the NRA’s 4 million-plus members.

For decades, LaPierre, 63, has been serving up heated us-vs.-them rhetoric to rally the NRA faithful. Usually it works; sometimes it backfires. There was his 1995 reference to federal law enforcement agents as “jack-booted government thugs.” (He later apologized.) And his 2000 declaration that President Bill Clinton was “willing to accept a certain level of killing to further his political agenda.” (No apology.) And his 2002 complaint that tougher airport screenings after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks signaled that “I guess it’s OK to wand-rape someone’s daughter in public.” A week after the December school shooting in Newtown, Conn., LaPierre gave a fiery speech calling for armed guards in every school. He blamed violence on a culture that celebrates gory video games and “blood-soaked slasher films” and rewards killers with fame.

“Gun nut!” the New York Post screamed on its front page. “The most revolting, tone-deaf statement I’ve ever seen,” tweeted then-Rep. Chris Murphy, now a Democratic senator from Connecticut. “Call me crazy,” LaPierre retorted on NBC’s “Meet the Press.” “I think the American people think it’s crazy not to do it,” referring to armed school guards. In fact, a Washington Post/ABC News poll conducted in January found that 55 percent of Americans said they would support a law “placing an armed guard in every school in the country.”

In the weeks since Newtown, LaPierre has been the ever-present public face of gun-rights forces, shuttling between speeches, hearing rooms and TV studios to forcefully reject proposals for tighter gun controls as misguided ideas that will do nothing to stop criminals and everything to tangle law-abiding citizens in a bureaucratic nightmare.

■ Associates describe longtime NRA head as intellectual, brash

Wayne LaPierre Jr., Executive Vice President and Chief Executive Officer of the NRA, speaks at its national convention in April 2012.

Jimmy Carter was president when LaPierre first went to work for the NRA in 1977, and for the past 22 years LaPierre has been the organization’s executive vice president, steering it through a transformation from a clubby marksmanship group into a political movement adept at beating back efforts to tighten firearms regulations.

Along the way, says Josh Sugarman, head of the pro-gun-control Violence Policy Center, LaPierre’s tenure has been marked by a willingness to push the envelope with over-the-top language that casts the government as the enemy and stokes “fear-driven paranoia.”

LaPierre has been richly rewarded for his efforts: NRA tax returns show he earned $835,000 in salary and $126,000 in other compensation in 2010.

For all of LaPierre’s tough talk, friends and former colleagues describe a soft-spoken man who’s a little scattered.

Aquilino, the former NRA spokesman, remembers his former colleague oversleeping and missing a golf outing with Vice President Dan Quayle. Leaving a trail of dropped notebooks and papers on the path from his office to a cab.

Aquilino says he once asked LaPierre what he wanted to do eventually and was told, “To tell the truth, I’d like to run an ice cream parlor in Maine.”

How does all of that square with LaPierre’s combative reputation?

“It’s all done on purpose,” says Grover Norquist, an anti-tax crusader and member of the NRA’s board. “It’s hard to say: ‘The Second Amendment’s LaPierre has been with the NRA since 1977 and in his current position for 22 years.

in danger’ and say it in a shy, soft-spoken way.”

Or, as LaPierre himself put it in a 2000 interview: “When I used less strong words for the last three years, everyone dozed off.”

No one snoozed in 1995 when LaPierre signed an NRA fundraising letter that accused the Clinton administration of empowering police to “murder law-abiding citizens” at will and described the ban on semi-automatic weapons as a law giving “jack-booted government thugs more power to take away our constitutional rights, break in our doors, seize our guns, destroy our property, and even injure or kill us.”

Even some NRA members were aghast. Former President George W. Bush very publicly quit the group. LaPierre at first defended the letter then offered a qualified apology.

He’d slipped over the line from hard-nosed to incendiary in an episode that will always brand him.

there was gunfire between the person in the cabin and law enforcement officers around the home before the blaze began.

TV helicopters showed the fire burning freely with no apparent effort to extinguish it.

Authorities have focused their hunt for Christopher Dorner there since they said he launched a campaign to exact revenge against the Los Angeles Police Department for his firing.

Authorities say Dorner threatened to bring “warfare” to LAPD officers and their families, spreading fear and setting off a search for him across three states and Mexico.

This week through Friday has been designated as “Love the Bus” week at Henderson County Schools. The district transportation department is encouraging parents, teachers and children to say thank you to mechanics, bus monitor and bus drivers.

“I think a lot of people probably don’t realize the responsibility we have with the kids to keep them safe,” said Williams.

“Miss Brenda,” as the kids call her, used to work at Gamco and Gibbs before she got behind the wheel of the big yellow bus. She had a few friends who were bus drivers and thought the profession suited her since she loves kids and enjoys having summers off.

It’s a career decision she hasn’t regretted.

“I love the kids and I just have really liked it through all the years that I have been here,” she said.

The older ones can be a bit rowdy, but all her kids are good ones, Williams said. The younger children are a constant source of amusement.

“The little ones are really cute,” Williams said. “You never know what they are going to tell you.”

Or what they are going to do. A young boy once gave her a box of candy for Valentine’s Day, but it “You shouldn’t have any guns in city places when you’re going out,” he said. But “people feel to be protected they’ve got to have some kind of firearm on them” and the Constitution guarantees that right.

Commissioner Jan Hite also apologized to the public. “I recognize that I made a mistake and I’m humble enough to admit Crenshaw, D-Lexington, is the bill’s chief sponsor. Similar proposals have passed the House but died in the Senate. Crenshaw said the issue is a matter of fairness, reflected in his conversation years ago with a man who helped at his office.

“We’re sitting there stuffing envelopes and finally he looked kind of sadly and said, ‘I wish I could vote.’ And I said, ‘What do you mean you wish you could vote?’ And he said, ‘Well, I have a felony and I can’t vote.’” yourself in. It’s time to stop the bloodshed,” LAPD Cmdr. Andrew Smith said earlier in the day at a news conference held outside police headquarters in Los Angeles, a starkly different atmosphere than last week when officials briefed the news media under tight security with Dorner on the loose.

The man has since died, Crenshaw said.

If the man inside the cabin does prove to be Dorner, it will lower tensions among the more than 40 targets police say he listed in an online rant.

Until Tuesday, authorities didn’t know whether Dorner was still near Big Bear, where they found his burned-out pickup last week.

Around 12:20 p.m. Tuesday, deputies got a report of a stolen vehicle, authorities said.

The location was directly across the street from where law enforcement set up their command post on Thursday and not far from where Dorner’s burned-out pickup was abandoned.

The people whose vehicle was stolen described the suspect as looking similar to Dorner. When authorities found the vehicle, the suspect ran into the forest and barricaded himself inside the cabin.

The first exchange of gunfire occurred about 12:45 p.m.

California Department of Fish and Wildlife said in a statement that one of its officers traveling down Highway 38 recognized a man who fit Dorner’s description traveling in the opposite direction.

The wildlife officer pursued the vehicle and there was a shooting in which the wildlife vehicle was hit numerous times and the suspect escaped on foot.

There was then a second exchange with San Bernardino County deputies, two of whom were shot. One died and the other was expected to live after undergoing surgery.

“We’re heartbroken,” Big Bear Lake Mayor Jay Obernolte said of the deputy’s death and the wounding of his colleague. “Words can’t express how grateful we are for the sacrifice those men have made in defense of the community and our thoughts and prayers are with them and their families.”

Police say Dorner began his run on Feb. 6 after they connected the slayings of a former police captain’s daughter and her fiancé with an angry Facebook rant they said he posted. Threats against the LAPD led officials to assign officers to protect officers and their families.

ADDRESS from 1A

Washington to tax more, borrow more and spend more.”

Sen. Rubio, in prepared remarks, said presidents of both parties have recognized that the free enterprise system brings middle-class prosperity.

“But President Obama?” Rubio said. “He believes it’s the cause of our problems.”

Obama also announced new steps to reduce the U.S. military footprint abroad, with 34,000 American troops withdrawing from Afghanistan within a year. And he had a sharp rebuke for North Korea, which launched a nuclear test just hours before his remarks, saying, “Provocations of the sort we saw last night will only isolate them further.”

Despite the pressing foreign policy concerns, jobs and growth dominated Obama’s prime-time address, underscoring the degree to which the economy remains a vulnerability for the president and could disrupt his plans for pursuing a broader agenda, including immigration overhaul, stricter gun laws and climate change legislation.

Standing in Obama’s way is a Congress that remains nearly as divided as it was during the final years of his first term, when Washington lurched from one crisis to another.

The president implored lawmakers to break through partisan logjams, asserting that “the greatest nation on Earth cannot keep conducting its business by drifting from one manufactured crisis to the next.”

“Americans don’t expect government to solve every problem,” he said. “They do expect us to forge reasonable compromise where we can.”

Yet Obama offered few signs of being willing to compromise himself, instead doubling down on his calls to create jobs by spending more government money and insisting that lawmakers pay down the deficit through a combination of targeted spending cuts and tax increases. But he offered few specifics on what he wanted to see cut, focusing instead on the need to protect programs that help the middle class, elderly and poor.

Bus driver Brenda Williams has served the Henderson County School system for nearly 30 years.

Williams now shuttles that student’s preschool-aged daughter on her mid-day route. The bus driver said she can typically recognize her former students.

“Even though they’ve changed a little bit in looks, you still remember their faces,” she said. “If you can’t put a name with it, you still remember their faces.”

Williams is wavering back and forth on whether she will retire at the end of the school year. She is thinking about making her decision in June. By that time, she should also know if her great-grandchildren are moving back to Florida.

“If they leave, then I’m going to be lost for sure if I give up my run and the kids move because I do a lot with them too on the weekends,” Williams said. “I enjoy driving the bus and I enjoy being with the kids, so I’m just still pitching it around.”

The area includes properties owned by Bernard Troy Branson; Christopher and Stacey Gager; Janet Wallace; Marvin and Carrilee Hancock and J.R. Higginson Family LLP. “Right now, all cases for restoration of civil rights are reviewed on a case-by-case basis, and we consult with the prosecutor in the case,” she said. “If a prosecutor objects, we hold the application in abeyance, except in cases where a prosecutor is known to object to all applications submitted. Study: Evansville ideal for IU medicine facility

By John Martin martinj@courierpress.com 812-464-7594

Downtown Evansville is the optimal place for a new Indiana University School of Medicine facility offering four years of education and training, a consultant said Tuesday.

The IU School of Medicine’s current Evansville program, at the University of Southern Indiana, serves students for only their first two years. IU by 2016 wants to establish a $35 million, 100,000-square-foot location allowing students to finish their four years locally, with residency opportunities at hospitals in Evansville, Jasper, Ind., and Owensboro, Ky.

Phase I of a study by Tripp Umbach, a consultant based in Pittsburgh, describes Downtown as the best general location. Officials said at a news conference that no decision has been made, however.

Regardless of where the facility is established, it will complement existing higher education programs in pharmacy, nursing, public health and other disciplines, according to Paul Umbach, senior consultant with Tripp Umbach.

“This can be an educational mecca for the Tri-State region, for folks to come and get any kind of health science training that’s needed,” Umbach said.

Local physicians, said Umbach, “are the lynchpin of this program. They

He did reiterate his willingness to tackle entitlement changes, particularly on Medicare, though he has ruled out increasing the eligibility age for the popular benefit program for seniors.

Republicans are ardently opposed to Obama’s calls for legislating more tax revenue to reduce the deficit and offset broad the automatic spending cuts — known as the sequester — that are to take effect March 1.

Obama broke little new ground on two agenda items he has pushed vigorously since winning reelection: overhauling the nation’s fractured immigration laws and enacting tougher gun control measures in the wake of the horrific massacre of school children in Newtown, Conn. Yet he pressed for urgency on both, calling on Congress to send him an immigration bill “in the next few months” and insisting lawmakers hold votes on his gun proposals.

“Each of these proposals deserves a vote in Congress,” he said. “If you want to vote no, that’s your choice.”

Numerous lawmakers wore green lapel ribbons in memory of those killed in the December shootings in Connecticut. Among those watching in the House gallery: the parents of 15-year-old Hadiya Pendleton, shot and killed recently in a park just a mile from the president’s home in Chicago, as well as other victims of gun violence.

On the economy, Obama called for raising the federal minimum wage from $7.25 to $9 by 2015. The minimum wage has been stagnant since 2007, and administration officials said the increase would strengthen purchasing power. The president also wants Congress to approve automatic increases in the wage to keep pace with inflation.

Looking for common ground anywhere he could find it, Obama framed his proposal to boost the minimum wage by pointing out that even his GOP presidential rival liked the idea. He said, “Here’s an idea that Gov. Romney and I actually agreed on last year: Let’s tie the minimum wage to the cost of living, so that it finally becomes a wage you can live on.”

will be asked to teach, and they will be compensated. They will be asked to lead, to bring medical students, nursing students, pharmacy and other new programs along. They need to be front and center in this plan.”

Umbach said that many medical students remain in communities where they do their residency. That’s why officials are hopeful that at least seven in 10 of the local four-year program’s physician graduates will practice in and around Evansville.

Steven Becker, director of the IU School of Medicine-Evansville, agreed that residency will be a critical piece of the program.

Nationwide, “we haven’t increased the number of practicing physicians significantly because we haven’t increased residency spots,” Becker said. “That’s why communities like ours have got to start residency programs if we’re going to be able to keep physicians in our area. Right now, our community is a little bit short in some areas/ We’re not critically short, but that will come. If we don’t do something now, we’re going to be critically short.”

Officials also envision the four-year program as being a driver of economic development and research initiatives.

Lt. Gov. Sue Ellspermann cited a need to bring talented young professionals to the region in medicine and other fields.

The stability and recent success of the program is Boston's biggest asset. With things going well, there's no need for big changes. Boston's hiring would make for a smooth transition with the possibility of the remainder of the coaching staff staying intact.

Clevenger has no doubt the players would respond to Boston. "The players have confidence in him," he said.

Boston is going to be a head coach somewhere soon. We'll have to see if that is at Henderson County or elsewhere.

Miami now a hoops haven

■ Heat, Hurricanes, Coley are making it a basketball town

By Tim Reynolds
Associated Press

MIAMI – LeBron James, Dwyane Wade and the reigning NBA champions. One of the hottest teams in NCAA men's basketball. The leading collegiate women's scorer in the country.

All in one city. Welcome to Miami.

Long considered a football town, thanks to those perfect-season Dolphins and five-time-national-champion Hurricanes, it seems like Miami now has an identity crisis of sorts. Football town or a basketball town? It's been the source of debate for some time, perhaps now more than ever, and South Floridians may all agree that it's a nice problem to have.

"People here like basketball," said Jerica Coley, the FIU guard whose 25.5-point-per-game average easily tops the women's Division I charts — and whose nickname, HolyColey, is part of a big-time marketing push by her school. "They want to see good basketball. And as a city, I guess we're pretty good right now."

Pretty good? That's an understatement.

The Heat will have the best record in the Eastern Conference at the All-Star break this weekend and boast a star-studded roster — keyed, of course, by the reigning MVP in James, who seems to be in line to win that award for a fourth time this spring.

DAVID SANTIAGO/ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Miami Heat's LeBron James, left, and Dwyane Wade attend an NCAA college basketball game between Miami and North Carolina on Saturday, Feb. 9, in Coral Gables, Fla. Miami won 87-61. Miami is becoming a basketball town with the reigning NBA champion Heat and third-ranked Hurricanes.

Jim Larranaga have gone from unranked to No. 3 in the nation and atop the Atlantic Coast Conference in about a month, easily becoming the biggest story in the college game this season after enjoying blowout wins over Duke and North Carolina. A few more miles away at FIU, Coley is starring on a nightly basis despite almost-constant double- and triple-teams against her.

Not to mention, the city also lays claim to a former women's national coach of the year in Miami's Katie Meier and a surging FIU men's program led by Richard Pitino, the son of legendary longtime Louisville coach Rick Pitino.

"It's cool. We turned this into a basketball town," Heat coach Erik Spoelstra said. "And I'm a fan of the other sports. I've gotten to know coach Larranaga the last two summers ... and since then I've spent a handful of times teams aren't exactly filling stadiums, hoops is hot. "It's well-deserved," said Heat guard James Jones, a former Hurricane player and a Miami native. "We have a very good coach and very good team down at the University of Miami. Evidently, we're the defending champs. FIU is on the way up. I think the game of basketball is continuing to grow here. This is always been predominantly a football town. The Dolphins have been here longer than anyone. But basketball has slowly gotten better."

Of late, it's seemed to have gotten better in a hurry.

The Heat won a title in 2006, were the NBA's worst team two years later, then landed James and Chris Bosh to play with Wade in 2010 — with two trips to the NBA Finals and one title to show so far. The Hurricanes' women's program was one of the nation's best over the past two years. And this season, the Miami men are the talk of the NCAA game, with many people already tabbing them as a Final Four-caliber team, even though few even listed them as a top-four team in the ACC entering the season.

"A lot of good things are happening in Miami," Wade said.

Even the stars are fans of the other teams in town these days. Wade, James and Jones were courtside for the Hurricanes' win over North Carolina this weekend, and it's not unusual to see college players in turn showing up at Heat games.

Wainwright's value on the rise for Cardinals

■ Team and ace pitcher put contract talks on hold contract, I want to get that nest egg," Wainwright said. "I thought about the risks every day when I went home, walking down the stairs, my bullpen sessions. I just said, 'This is ridiculous.' Once you get that out of the way. Financially I'm in a place where I don't have to worry about a contract as much."

Mozeliak wants to take no chances that this could linger.

"The one thing is we haven't set deadlines at this point," Mozeliak said. "We have plenty of time attend spring training, but stopped short of saying he's ready to retire.

The seven-time All-Star informed the team of his decision on Tuesday, when Reds pitchers and catchers reported for the start of camp. Rolen, who turns 38 on April 4, had been mulling an offer to fill a reserve role with the NL Central champions.

He's been limited each of the last three seasons by chronic problems with his left shoulder and back spasms.

"Right now, I'm simply not ready to make a commitment," Rolen said, in a statement released by the team. "I would like to leave my options open, without closing any doors. I am looking forward to all of the challenges, both personally and professionally, I will face in the future."

Rolen became a free agent after last season, when he batted .245 in 92 games with eight homers and 39 RBIs. He missed time with the shoulder and back problems. Todd Frazier is set to take over at third base this season, but the Reds offered Rolen a chance to stay in a reduced role.

■ Right-hander Mat Latos has agreed to an Latos will receive salaries of $4.25 million this year and $7.25 million in 2014 under Tuesday's deal.

Cincinnati obtained Latos from San Diego before the 2012 season.

■ Felix Hernandez and Seattle reached agreement Tuesday on a contract that is expected to make the Mariners ace the highest-paid pitcher in baseball.

Hernandez's deal is expected to be for $175 million over seven years. Terms of the contract were not released by the team. Hernandez and Zduriencik will hold a news conference in Seattle on Wednesday afternoon where Hernandez is expected to sign the contract.

■ Alex Rodriguez will not report to spring training with the Yankees' position players and will work on his rehabilitation from hip surgery in New York.

The third baseman is expected to be sidelined until at least the All-Star break following the Jan. 16 operation.

Alabama football players arrested

By John Zenor
Associated Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala. – Three University of Alabama football players have been charged with knocking students unconscious and stealing their wallets, while a fourth player has been charged with using a stolen debit card, officials said Tuesday.

Linebacker Tyler Hayes, 18, and safety Eddie Williams, 20, confessed to robbing a student who was punched in the head and face and kicked in the ribs and back early Monday morning, according to court documents. Williams said D.J. Pettway, 20, a defensive lineman, and Hayes waited in a nearby vehicle about an hour later while he knocked out and robbed another student. Williams and Hayes both admitted to their involvement, according to the documents.

Williams and running back Brent Calloway, 20, both admitted to using a stolen credit card to buy snacks from vending machines inside a dormitory, the documents said.

All four students were indefinitely suspended by coach Nick Saban.

Pettway and Hayes were charged with second-degree robbery. Williams was charged with fraudulent use of a credit card and second-degree robbery. Calloway was charged with fraudulent use of a credit card. Williams was released on $65,000 bond, while Hayes and Pettway were released on $60,000 bond each. Calloway was released on $5,000 bond.

"This behavior is unacceptable for any student-athlete at the University of Alabama and not representative of our football program," Saban said in a news release.

All four players were backups last season for Alabama, which has won two straight national titles and three of the past four. Williams didn't play in 2012. But he was one of the nation's top prospects the previous year and moved from receiver to safety.

IOC drops wrestling from 2020 Olympics

■ Decision removes one of the oldest sports from the Games

By Stephen Wilson
Associated Press

LAUSANNE, Switzerland — IOC leaders dropped wrestling from the Olympic program on Tuesday, a surprise decision that removes one of the oldest Olympic sports from the 2020 Games.

The IOC executive board decided to retain modern pentathlon — the event considered most at risk — and remove wrestling instead from its list of 25 “core sports.”

The IOC board acted after reviewing the 26 sports on the current Olympic program. Eliminating one sport allows the International Olympic Committee to add a new sport to the program later this year.

Wrestling, which combines freestyle and Greco-Roman events, goes back to the inaugural modern Olympics in Athens in 1896.

“This is a process of renewing and renovating the program for the Olympics,” IOC spokesman Mark Adams said. “In the view of the executive board, this was the best program for the Olympic Games in 2020. It’s not a case of what’s wrong with wrestling, it is what’s right with the 25 core sports.”

Adams said the decision was made by secret ballot over several rounds, with members voting each time on which sport should not be included in the core group. IOC President Jacques Rogge did not vote.

Wrestling was voted out from a final group that also included modern pentathlon, taekwondo and field hockey, officials familiar with the vote told The Associated Press. They spoke on condition of anonymity because the voting details were not made public.

The board voted after reviewing a report by the IOC program commission report that analyzed 39 criteria, including television ratings, ticket sales, anti-doping policy and global participation and popularity. With no official rankings or recommendations contained in the report, the final decision by the 15-member board was also subject to political, emotional and sentimental factors.

U.S. wrestlers are blindsided by Olympic ouster

By Luke Meredith
Associated Press

Rulon Gardner’s epic upset of Russian wrestling great Alexander Karelin in 2000 remains one of the most compelling moments of the modern Olympics.

Starting in 2020, youngsters looking to Gardner and Karelin for inspiration won’t have a chance to excel on the sport’s biggest stage.

Gardner and nearly everyone else associated with the sport in the U.S. were jolted Tuesday when International Olympic Committee leaders dropped wrestling from the Summer Games.

The move is set to take effect for the 2020 Olympics and eliminates a sport that’s been a staple of both the ancient and modern games.

“It’s the IOC trying to change the Olympics to make it more mainstream and more viewer-friendly instead of sticking to what they founded the Olympics on, and that was basically amateur sports,” Gardner told The Associated Press by phone from Logan, Utah. “To get the death penalty out of nowhere.”

The decision by the IOC to phase out wrestling will leave the U.S. without one of its most successful Olympic sports.

The only sports in which the Americans have won more medals than wrestling is swimming and track and field — and those two have far more medal opportunities.

Americans have won a record 113 freestyle Olympic medals, by far the most of any nation. Though the U.S. had slipped in recent Olympic cycles, it bounced back with a pair of London Games gold medalists in Jordan Burroughs — possibly the best wrestler in the world — and Jake Varner.

“I do think wrestling people are the strongest in the world, and they’re resilient. And we’ll come out of whatever happens. But short term, yeah, it’s sad,” 2004 Olympic gold medalist and Penn State coach Cael Sanderson said.

“I just think of the kids in our program that dream of being Olympic champions. And to think that now that’s no longer an opportunity just so the IOC stay fresh and continue to rotate sports and whatever their plan is — it’s tough to think about.”

Wrestling is also one of the most popular youth sports in the U.S. The National Federation of State High School Associations reports that the sport was sixth among prep boys with nearly 275,000 competing in 2010-11.

“Wrestling is the Olympics. It’s the toughest, most grueling, most demanding and most humbling sport there is. It teaches you so many life lessons,” said Jake Herbert, who wrestled for the U.S. in the London Games.

Wrestling will now join seven other sports in applying for inclusion in 2020. The others are a combined bid from baseball and softball, karate, squash, roller sports, sport climbing, wakeboarding and wushu. They will be vying for a single opening in 2020.

USA Wrestling executive director Richard Bender calls his sport “one of the most diverse,” with nearly 200 nations from all continents participating.

“It is an inclusive sport which provides opportunities worldwide, regardless of geography, race, gender or physical characteristics,” he said. “We look forward to telling the story about wrestling to the International Committee leadership and the entire world about our great sport and why it should be part of the Olympic movement forever.”

The IOC executive board will meet in May in St. Petersburg, Russia, to decide which sport or sports to propose for 2020. The final vote will be in September in Buenos Aires, Argentina.

“Given the history and tradition of wrestling, and its popularity and universality, we were surprised when the decision was announced,” U.S. Olympic Committee CEO Scott Blackmun said. “It is important to remember that today’s action is a recommendation, and we hope that there will be a meaningful opportunity Olympic program since the 1912 Stockholm Games. It was created by French baron Pierre de Coubertin, the founder of the modern Olympic movement, and combines fencing, horse riding, swimming, running and shooting.

Klaus Schormann, president of governing body UIPM, lobbied hard to protect his sport’s Olympic status and it paid off in the end.

“We have promised things and we have delivered,” he said after Tuesday’s decision. “That gives me a great feeling. It also gives me new energy to develop our sport further and never give up.”

Modern pentathlon also benefited from the work of Juan Antonio Samaranch Jr., the son of the former IOC president who is a UIPM vice president and member of the IOC board.

“We were considered weak in some of the scores in the program commission report but strong in others,” Samaranch told the AP. “We played our cards to the best of our ability and stressed the positives. Tradition is one of our strongest assets, but we are also a multi-sport discipline that produces very complete people.”

Soccer faces match-fixing fight

■ The beautiful game becoming the dirty game

By Sheila Norman-Culp
Associated Press

ZURICH — Soccer is falling under a cloud of suspicion as never before, sullied by a multibillion-dollar web of match-fixing that is corrupting increasingly larger parts of the world’s most popular sport.

Internet betting, emboldened criminal gangs and even the economic downturn have created conditions that make soccer — or football, as the sport is called around the world — a lucrative target.

Known as “the beautiful game” for its grace, athleticism and traditions of fair play, soccer is under threat of becoming a dirty game.

“Football is in a disastrous state,” said Chris Eaton, director of sport integrity at the International Centre for Sport Security. “Fixing of matches for criminal gambling fraud purposes is absolutely endemic worldwide ... arrogantly happening daily.”

At least 50 nations in 2012 had match-fixing investigations — almost a quarter of the 209 members of FIFA, soccer’s governing body — involving hundreds of people.

Europol, the European Union’s police body,

In this Nov. 5, 2012, photo, Croatian soccer player Mario Cizmek is seen at a stadium in Zagreb. Cizmek was convicted of rigging games in Croatia’s first division in 2010. At his trial and in subsequent interviews with The Associated Press, he spoke about the unwritten rules of match-fixing.

announced last week that it had found 680 “suspicious” games worldwide since 2008, including 380 in Europe.

Experts interviewed by The Associated Press believe that figure may be low. Sportradar, a company in London that monitors global sports betting, estimates that about 300 soccer games a year in Europe alone could be rigged.

“We do not detect it better,” Eaton said in an interview with the AP. “There’s just more to detect.”

Globalization has propelled the fortunes of popular soccer teams like Manchester United and showered millions in TV revenue on clubs that get into tournaments like Europe’s Champions League.

Criminals have realized that it can be vastly easier to shift gambling profits across borders than it is to move contraband.

“These are real criminals — Italian mafia, Chinese gangs, Russian mafia,” said Sylvia Schenk, a sports expert with corruption watchdog Transparency International.

Ralf Mutschke, FIFA’s security chief, admits that soccer officials had underestimated the scope of match-fixing. He told the AP that “realistically, there is no way” FIFA can tackle organized crime by itself, saying it needs more help from national law enforcement agencies.

The growing threat has prompted the European Union’s 27 nations to unite against match-fixing.

“The scale is such that no country can deal with the problem on its own,” said EU Sport Commissioner Androulla Vassiliou.

Gambling on sports generates hundreds of billions of dollars a year, and up to 90 percent of that is bet on soccer, Interpol chief Ronald Noble told the AP in an interview. Eaton, the former FIFA expert, has cited an estimated $500 billion a year.

The total amount of money generated by sports betting would equal the gross domestic product of Switzerland, ranked 19th in the world.

Match-fixing — where the outcome of a game is determined in advance — is used by gambling rings to make money off bets they know they will win. Matches also are rigged to propel a team into a higher-ranking division where it can earn more revenue.

FIFA has estimated that organized crime takes in as much as $15 billion a year by fixing matches. In Italy alone, a recent rigging scandal is estimated to have produced $2.6 billion for the Camorra and the Mafia crime syndicates, Eaton said.

Soccer officials are well aware that repeated match-fixing will undermine the integrity of their sport, driving away sponsors and reducing the billion-dollar value of lucrative TV contracts.

FIFA earned $2.4 billion in broadcast sales linked to the 2010 World Cup in South Africa.

Wambach to play her 200th match for U.S.

By Teresa M. Walker
Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Abby Wambach simply laughs when asked about playing her 200th game for the U.S. women’s national team. The 2012 FIFA Player of the Year is far too busy playing to dwell on her accomplishments.

“Hopefully I’ll think about those more when I retire,” Wambach said Tuesday.

“I’m not really big on personal accolades and awards. It’s just not my style. So for me, it’s another game. It’s exciting, I guess. I don’t know. It’s hard to explain because I don’t really put that much value on that kind of stuff. I put value on wins. I put value on championships.”

With 152 goals, the 33-year-old forward enters Wednesday’s exhibition against Scotland six from the world record set by Mia Hamm from 1987-04. Only seven Americans have appeared in more international matches.

Midfielder Shannon Boxx called it a huge accomplishment.

“We don’t have that many players that have been able to get to that level,” American midfielder Shannon Boxx said. “I think it’s her day tomorrow, and we can hopefully celebrate it with her. Hopefully, she’ll get a goal to continue her strength and her power.” Kristine Lilly tops the U.S. list with 352 appearances. Defender Christie Rampone was set for her 278th on Wednesday night, while the others include Hamm (275), Julie Foudy (272), Joy Fawcett (239), Tiffeny Milbrett (204) and Kate Markgraf (201).

“She’s an amazing, amazing player and an amazing person,” defender Ali Krieger said. “Great role model for this team, and she’s our leader. She’s one of the best forwards in the world, obviously the best player this past year in the world, and we’re lucky to have her. She’s going strong, and I hope that we win for her and this team and that she scores a few goals just to make it 10 times better.”

Wambach credits being the youngest of seven for understanding the approach needed to play within a team and great coaches over the years believing in her for allowing her to reach 200 caps in her career.

Advice

Long-distance dad wants to be close to kids

Dear Amy: I'm a divorced dad in my late 30s and have two beautiful daughters, ages 5 and 7. I've been divorced for four years now. Two years ago, my ex-wife decided she wanted to relocate out of state. After a big legal battle that took a serious financial and emotional toll on me, my family and especially my young daughters, I decided that I could no longer continue the battle, and so I allowed my ex-wife to relocate. I'm torn about the decision, but in my heart I know I did the right thing for my daughters. Now they live 1,000 miles away, and I get to see them on Skype, talk on the phone, and they travel back home every school break and every summer. I also fly to visit them when time, money allow it.

Any advice on how I can be the best "long-distance dad" I can be?
— Distant Dad
Dear Dad: I applaud your intentions and determination. This might be tough to hear, but the biggest single impact you can have on your daughters at this stage is to maintain a positive relationship with their mother. Realistically, she controls access to them in very basic ways. I can only hope that now that she has gotten what she wanted, she will actively promote access — because this is best for everyone — especially the girls. Skype is great for maintaining face-to-face contact. In addition to spontaneous calls, setting up a scheduled call each week would give the kids something to look forward to. Additionally I suggest creating a photo book for each girl containing pictures of you going about your daily routine — and of lots of photos of them. Kids love to leaf through photos and read warm and funny captions. Send them postcards. This is easy and quick.

Getting mail is fun for kids, and it's a great way to connect. During your visits with them, do your best to establish a routine. Include their friends as much as possible. Don't express too much sadness about your long-distance separation — this is the reality of all of your lives, and staying positive will help them (and you) to cope. Send questions via e-mail to askamy@tribune.com or by mail to Ask Amy, Chicago Tribune, TT500, 435 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago, IL 60611.

Coffee filter makes great bowl for chips

Dear Heloise: I often snack on potato chips. When I would like some but don't want to get a plate dirty, I grab a coffee filter. I throw a handful of chips (or any snack) in there and use it as a temporary "bowl." When done, I just toss the filter away.
— A Reader in Alaska
Dear Alaska: These filters are so inexpensive. I do the same thing with them, even with celery and carrot sticks.
— Heloise
Dear Heloise: My favorite way to store ripe bananas is to remove the skin, place in a freezer bag and freeze. When you need a quick breakfast, put it in the blender with any liquid/ juice, milk, etc.

Add some yogurt and any other fruit or berries for a smoothie. This works better than adding ice to a smoothie, as it comes out much creamier.
— Regina in New Jersey
Dear Heloise: I have lost your mother's olive spread recipe. Could you please reprint it, since I cannot remember it by memory?
— Nora M. in Texas
Send a money-saving or time-saving hint to Heloise, P.O. Box 795000, San Antonio, TX 78279-5000, fax it to 210-HELOISE or email it to Heloise@Heloise.com. I can't answer your letter personally but will use the best hints received in my column.

Bible is clear about stealing, even sermons

BILLY GRAHAM
COLUMNIST
The Bible's command is clear: "Do not steal. Do not lie. Do not deceive one another" (Leviticus 19:11). Many pastors use the Internet for research as they prepare sermons — and that's perfectly acceptable, when done with integrity. Pray for this church as it seeks a new pastor, and pray, too, for your own pastor. Pastors have a serious and often difficult responsibility, and they need our prayerful support and encouragement as they seek to "Be shepherds of the church of God, which he bought with his own blood" (Acts 20:28). Send your queries to "My Answer," c/o Billy Graham, Billy Graham Evangelistic Association, 1 Billy Graham Parkway, Charlotte, N.C., 28201; call 877 2-GRAHAM; or visit the Web site for the Billy Graham Evangelistic Association, www.billygraham.org.

writing — isn't tolerated in secular circles today, such as universities or the media. Shouldn't Christians have even higher standards? Of course we should. The Bible urges us to "become blameless and pure, children of God without fault in a crooked and depraved generation" (Philippians 2:15). Perhaps this pastor excused his actions by telling himself he was too busy, or he wanted to give his congregation the best sermons he possibly could, but such choices still involved deceit on his part.

Month-long rectal bleeding warrants trip to specialist

Dear Dr. Roach: For longer than a month now, I have had blood in my stool. Not just a little, and not just with stool. I am losing blood constantly. My doctor said he's sure it's a hemorrhoid, which he checked me for and then told me it wasn't that. I can't afford to see another doctor. My wife found something on the Internet about an internal bowel infection that can be treated only with antibiotics. I cannot get antibiotics without a doctor's prescription. We both are scared to death and have nowhere to turn. I am only 27 years old!

— S.M.
Dear S.M.: Bleeding from the GI tract is always a frightening thing. Blood can come from every part of the GI tract, but when it looks like blood in the stool, that almost always means the blood is coming from the colon. At age 27, colon cancer and polyps are unlikely but not impossible. It's possible that you have an infection, since many intestinal infections can cause bleeding, but a month is a long time to have bleeding from an infection. One big concern I have upon hearing your story is inflammatory bowel disease. There are two kinds — Crohn's disease and ulcerative colitis. Both of these can cause abdominal discomfort and bleeding. The right diagnostic test is an endoscopy. I understand when you say you can't afford to see another doctor, but actually, you can't afford not to. Don't delay. The booklet on colon cancer provides useful information on the causes and cures of this common malady. Readers can obtain a copy by writing: Dr. Roach — No. 505, Box

Horoscope

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (Feb. 13). You'll make yourself more visible over the next five weeks and jump-start your star power in the process. Knowing more people leads to the discovery of your talents, because each person brings out something new in you. In April, you'll start to earn more. Someone falls in love — or more deeply in love — with you in June. Pisces and Capricorn people adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 3, 19, 21, 4 and 7.
ARIES (March 21-April 19). You'll have doubts about whether you can accomplish what's being asked of you, but try to believe in yourself anyway. Your training will kick in just when you need it the most.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You love a challenge, and the one you face today will be life-altering. You'll be forced to show a different side of you, and this new personality is surprisingly effective at getting people to move.
GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You can't change another person, but you can inspire a person to change, and that's precisely what you'll do. You'll be an example of the change you want to see in someone else.
CANCER (June 22-July 22). You strive to be accepting. It's not easy when you're around people who don't give you any obvious incentive for kindness, but those are precisely the people who most need an open heart.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). No matter how long you have known a person, you can always learn something new about him or her. Today you'll ask the questions that invite surprising answers.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Social skills are like any other skill set in that if you don't put them to good use, they will atrophy. The mixing and mingling you do now will keep you strong for upcoming events.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Whenever you start, you feel like you should have begun sooner, but this is just one of time's ways of playing tricks on you. Don't buy it! Rest assured, your timing is perfect.
SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Someone near you may be in a crabby mood, and there's nothing you can say to make it better. The most supportive move of all is to give this person space.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Your genuine interest in a subject makes learning about it very easy. This is also true of an intriguing person. With your curiosity in the lead, you always know what to say next.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Human nature being what it is, very few people know how to make a cool exit. It takes a fair amount of self-control to quit while you're ahead and leave them wanting more.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). The chemical reactions between you and the people in your environment may be particularly strong now. You can't help who you like or don't like, but you can still choose how to act on the feeling.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Facing your challenges dead-on makes you powerful. And you're relatively fearless today, too, so stare your problem in the eyeballs until it blinks or flinches.

Economy has grown steadily over Obama’s tenure

By Christopher S. Rugaber and Paul Wiseman
Associated Press

WASHINGTON— The U.S. economy, the expected focus of Tuesday night’s State of the Union speech, is much healthier than it was four years ago. Yet growth remains slow and unemployment high.

In early 2009, the U.S. economy was in the midst of a full-blown panic sparked by the collapse of a housing bubble. Companies were slashing jobs. The unemployment rate was surging.

Auto sales in January 2009 had reached a 26-year low.

“You don’t need to hear another list of statistics to know that our economy is in crisis,” President Barack Obama said in his first State of the Union address in February 2009.

The numbers were frightening.

Employers cut 794,000 jobs in January 2009 and 4.5 million from November 2008 through April 2009.

Home prices plunged 19 percent in the 12 months that ended in January 2009. Eventually, they fell by a third overall before bottoming in late 2011.

Perhaps the clearest barometer of the pain was soaring unemployment. The unemployment rate was 7.8 percent in January 2009, just below the current 7.9 percent. But only two months later, in March 2009, it was nearly a full point higher — 8.7 percent. By October, it had peaked at 10 percent.

The recovery has been agonizingly slow. Consumers have been wary about spending after piling up debt in the mid-2000s. Local governments, squeezed by tight budgets, have cut 560,000 jobs in four years. And until recently, an anemic housing market discouraged the home construction that in past economic recoveries had powered growth.

Now, companies are hiring modestly but steadily. Employers added an average of 181,000 jobs a month in 2012 and 175,000 in 2011. Still, unemployment remains far higher than the 5 percent to 6 percent that economists regard as normal.

But home prices are finally rebounding as sales and housing starts have recovered. And Americans are buying cars again.

“During the last four years, the economy has stabilized,” says economist Sung Won Sohn of California State University Channel Islands.

What has happened to the economy since 2009 likely would have happened whoever occupied the White House, Sohn says.

“We tend to give a lot of credit or blame (for the economy) to the incumbent president,” he says. “The fact of the matter is, the U.S. economy is like an aircraft carrier. You can turn it around but not on a dime.

Platinum and palladium surged Tuesday on renewed concerns that supplies of the platinum group metals will shrink.

Zimbabwe's government reportedly gave platinum producers two years to begin refining the metals in Zimbabwe. That spurred speculation on Tuesday that production of platinum will drop, because the companies will likely have to build the refineries.

Both metals climbed more than 1 percent. Platinum for April rose $2.10 to settle at $1,717.20 an ounce. Palladium for March rose $12.80 to $771.40 an ounce.

"The worry is that it's going to restrict production," said James Steel, chief commodities analyst at HSBC in New York. "That was the prime motivator for the price movement today."

Platinum-group metals are widely used to make catalytic converters that filter car exhaust. The majority of the world's reserves are found in just one country, South Africa. But neighboring Zimbabwe also sits on large reserves.

Prices for other metals rose Tuesday. Gold for April delivery rose 50 cents to $1,649.60 an ounce, while silver for March rose 10.9 cents to $31.019 an ounce.

March copper rose 2.15 cents to $3.744 per pound.

Grain prices edged lower. Corn fell 6 cents to $6.9625 a bushel while wheat dropped 9.5 cents to $7.32 a bushel.

Soybeans fell 10.7 cents to $14.2075 per bushel.

In energy contracts, benchmark crude rose 48 cents to finish at $97.51 on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

OPEC, the Vienna-based organization which includes many of the world's key oil exporters, raised its 2013 forecast for global demand to 89.7 million barrels, citing "some signs of recovery in the global economy and colder weather at the start of this year." It said about half of the demand increase over 2012 would come from China.

In other energy trading on the Nymex: Wholesale gasoline rose 3 cents to finish at $3.05 a gallon. Natural gas fell 5 cents to end at $3.23 per 1,000 cubic feet.

Heating oil rose less than a penny to finish at $3.24 a gallon.

Airlines improve service statistics

U.S. airlines were less likely in 2012 to lose your suitcase than at any other point in the last two decades, the government announced Tuesday.

There were only 3.09 reports of lost, delayed or damaged baggage for every 1,000 passengers, the lowest annual rate since the Department of Transportation started tracking incidents in 1988.

Airlines also improved their performance in getting planes to gates on time.

Last year, 81.85 percent of flights arrived within 15 minutes of their scheduled time. That is the third highest rate since 1988. The record was set in 2002 at 82.14 percent.

Market unimpressed by Goodyear earnings

Goodyear easily topped Wall Street expectations for the fourth quarter, but shares slid Tuesday with Europe dragging down the tire maker's outlook for 2013.

The Akron company cut its full-year outlook for 2013 segment operating income from $1.6 billion, to between $1.4 billion and $1.5 billion.

The company broke even for the quarter, compared with net income of $18 million, or 7 cents per share, during the same period last year.

Revenue was $5 billion, down from $5.7 billion last year as a sluggish European economy led to a 16 percent drop in sales for the region.

Excluding charges, Goodyear earned 39 cents per share.

Analysts surveyed by FactSet expected fourth-quarter earnings of 20 cents per share, excluding charges, on $5.34 billion in revenue.

Ticketmaster will now allow fans to transfer tickets to friends or family digitally at no extra charge.

That could save the hassle of exiting an arena to meet up with members of your party when they show up late. The technology works with paper tickets and those printed at home, too.

The company says it will incorporate the technology into its mobile app this spring ahead of the summer concert season.

Coca-Cola's profit up on growth overseas

Coca-Cola says its profit rose 13 percent in the fourth quarter as the world's biggest beverage company sold more of its drinks in emerging markets and benefited from a shift in the calendar that resulted in two extra selling days.

The Atlanta-based company said global sales volume rose 3 percent, driven by gains in countries such as Russia and Turkey. In North America, its biggest market by revenue, volume rose just 1 percent, boosted by its Powerade sports drinks and bottled teas. Soda volume declined 2 percent.

WASHINGTON

Four Loko ordered to alter packaging

The makers of a popular carbonated alcoholic drink guzzled on college campuses are going to be changing the look of its Four Loko cans to settle the government's charges of deceptive marketing.

The Federal Trade Commission said Tuesday that Chicago-based Phusion Projects will be required to put an "alcohol facts panel" on the back of flavored malt beverage cans containing more than two servings of alcohol. The panel, similar to "nutritional facts" labels found on foods, would disclose the alcohol by volume and the number of servings in the container.

Phusion also will have to redesign cans of drinks containing more than 2.5 servings of alcohol so they can be sealed and the drink wouldn't have to be consumed in one sitting.

The FTC had accused Phusion of implying in ads that its supersized 23.5-ounce can of Four Loko was equal to one or two regular 12-ounce beers. In fact, the agency says, the can — which contains up to 12 percent alcohol — is really more like four to five beers.

Dow closes at highest level of year, nears record

By Steve Rothwell
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The Dow rose to its highest close of the year, putting it within 1 percent of its record. Stocks gained after impressive results from two big consumer brands.

The Dow Jones industrial average closed up 47.46 to 14,018.70 Tuesday. That is 146 points from its record close of 14,164.53 set in October 2007. The Standard & Poor's 500 gained 2.42 points to 1,519.43, also close to its record.

In a quiet day of trade, stocks were driven higher by beauty products maker Avon and luxury clothing and accessories company Michael Kors, whose results impressed investors. Consumer spending accounts for 70 percent of economic activity in the U.S.

Financial and home building stocks also lifted stocks, led by Bank of America and Masco Corp, which notched some of the day's biggest gains.

The Dow has surged at the start of the year, logging its best January in almost two decades, after lawmakers reached a last-minute deal to avoid the "fiscal cliff" of sweeping tax increases and spending cuts. Investors are also becoming more optimistic that the housing market is recovering and that hiring is picking up.

The Dow has now advanced 7 percent this year, and the S&P 500 is up 6.6 percent.

The 30-member Dow has now closed above 14,000 twice this month. Before February, the index had closed above that level just nine times in its history. The first time was in July 2007; the rest were in October of that year.

Avon's stock price jumped $3.51, or 20 percent, to $20.79 after the company posted a fourth-quarter loss that wasn't as bad as analysts expected.

■ PepsiCo introduces new breakfast drink containing juice, caffeine and a familiar taste

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — If you don't like coffee or tea, Mountain Dew has a new breakfast drink that might perk you up.

PepsiCo Inc. is rolling out a new drink called Kickstart this month that has Mountain Dew flavor but is made with 5 percent juice and Vitamins B and C, along with an extra jolt of caffeine.

The company, based in Purchase, N.Y., is hoping to boost sales by reaching Mountain Dew fans at a new time of day: morning.

PepsiCo said it doesn't consider Kickstart to be an energy drink, noting that it still has far less caffeine than drinks like Monster and Red Bull and none of the mysterious ingredients that have raised concerns among lawmakers and consumer advocates.

But Kickstart, which comes in flavors such as "energizing orange citrus" and "energizing fruit punch," could nevertheless give the company a side-door into the fast-growing energy drink market without getting tangled in any of its controversies.

The drink comes in the same 16-ounce cans as popular energy drinks made by Monster Beverage Corp., which also offers options with juice

And the TV ad features young men skateboarding, reminiscent of the marketing themes used by energy drink makers.

Simon Lowden, chief marketing officer for PepsiCo's Americas beverages, says the idea for Kickstart came about after the company learned through consumer research that Mountain Dew fans were looking for an alternative to traditional morning drinks such as coffee, tea and juice.

"They didn't really see anything that fit their needs," he said.

Lowden said Kickstart was developed independently from a Taco Bell breakfast drink introduced last year that combines Mountain Dew and orange juice.

PepsiCo says Kickstart, which is carbonated, is also not a soda because its 5 percent juice content qualifies it to be considered a "juice drink" under guidelines set by the Food and Drug Administration.

A spokeswoman for the FDA said the agency doesn't have definitions for what qualifies as a soda or an energy drink.

With the growth of energy drinks such as Monster and Red Bull expected to slow, Kickstart could also signal the emergence of a new category that plays off the promise of energy and other health benefits, said John Sicher, publisher of the trade journal Beverage Digest.

In a nod to the growing concerns about sugary drinks, for example, Kickstart also uses artificial sweeteners to reduce its caloric content to about half that of regular soda; a can has 80 calories.

The promise of "energy" has been a big seller in the beverage industry in recent years, with the energy drink market increasing 17 percent in 2011 even as broader soft drink consumption has continued to decline, according to Beverage Digest.

PepsiCo and the Coca-Cola Co. have largely watched that growth from the sidelines, however, with players such as Monster Beverage and Red Bull dominating the market.

Important Digestive Health Alert

FDA Warnings May Have Saved My Life!

Startling revelation on possible dangers of antacids in treating stomach woes and indigestion

By Maureen Reynolds

I am no medical expert. Far from it. Just a regular, busy Mom of four who was miserable for many years with awful, painful stomach issues. Sometimes, I would eat and feel like I was lit on fire. I would start choking, I couldn't swallow properly, I'd break into a cold sweat and then vomit. At those times, I thought that I would never be able to enjoy a meal again.

Last year I broke my wrist, I'm not an old person, I'm 56 and thought I was in decent shape. My Mom, who is in assisted living, also recently suffered from a broken hip. I am still paying the medical bills from all of it. I thought our family was just prone to these fractures until I read an article that stopped me dead in my tracks. It talked about a recent FDA warning that said if you take certain antacids like Prilosec®, Nexium®, Prevacid®, Dexilant®, Zegerid®, Protonix®, Aciphex®, Vimovo®, Prilosec OTC®, Zegerid OTC®, and Prevacid 24HR® that there was an increased risk of hip, bone and spinal fractures.† It also said that these medications were not meant to be taken for more than one year for prescription, and for over-the-counter versions (OTC), no more than three 14 continuous day treatments per year unless instructed by a physician.† I almost fainted when I read this because my Mom and I both had been taking them daily for years, but I now understand about what might have happened to us and can't tell you how upset and victimized I now feel.

Thank God I saw the FDA warning. I never would have known certain antacids could be so bad for me!

I went to my Doctor to find out more. He explained to me that massive studies showed these antacids caused side effects including fractures, seizures, bacterial infections, and much more to those taking them, that users must be warned. We are talking about drugs that you hear advertised every day all over TV.

He also explained that they shut down the production of stomach acid, which our bodies need to absorb nutrition and control harmful bacteria. I asked if there was anything else that I could try without the negative side effects. He told me that I might not need a drug at all!

Maureen Reynolds AloeCure® Advocate

A better alternative is an all natural solution that promotes healthy digestion called AloeCure®, which actually uses pure Aloe Vera to balance stomach acid and has no known side effects.

I wondered how something natural could be strong and powerful, but I was desperate, so I hoped and prayed this was the answer.

I also discovered that there are tales in the Bible of a healing Aloe Vera plant. And that gave me comfort, as I believe that the miraculous powers of natural substances can be even more powerful than some of these chemicals.

My doctor was right. AloeCure® worked. I can eat what I want and sleep through the night. My digestion is healthy and my discomfort is completely gone!

I also gave some to my Mom who is thrilled with the results. I wanted to share my story with other people, so they can experience the relief that I have and not have to suffer the way my Mom and I did. So if you don't believe me, just try AloeCure® for yourself. It is truly a miracle.

Powerful, fast-acting, all natural AloeCure® is available to readers of this publication. There are a limited number of free bottles and bonus gifts and our phone operators are standing by.

Try AloeCure® 100% Risk Free. For a limited time the makers of AloeCure® have agreed to send you up to 6 free bottles plus 2 free bonus gifts with every order. They are yours to keep no matter what. That's enough AloeCure® for 30 days of digestive relief absolutely free.

But hurry! This is a special introductory offer, reserved for our readers only. Call today, feel better tomorrow.
